

Motion Planners

- In Robotics, several optimization based frameworks called motion planners are used to generate realizable motions for robots.
- These motion planners expect minimum input from the user such as where and when to place the feet on the ground, final desired location of the robot etc.. based on which a realistic motion is generated.
- The generated motions are then used as a reference by robots in reality to move from one place to another.